

REBECCA ALEXANDER, LCSW-R, MPH, RYT

Rebecca Alexander is an award-winning psychotherapist, author, and disability advocate living with Usher Syndrome, a genetic condition causing progressive hearing and vision loss.

With nearly two decades of clinical experience, her work focuses on trauma, resilience, and identity, blending professional expertise with lived experience. She has spoken at leading institutions including Harvard Medical School, Memorial Sloan Kettering, Microsoft, and Google. Rebecca is the author of Not Fade Away, currently in development as a major motion picture, and her work challenges audiences to rethink inclusion, connection, and what it means to truly belong.
